Crucial LNDD Error → Flawed Report

- Contamination of machine or of control urine

Please read the caveats at the beginning of the appendix.

In this document, LNDD issues a retraction of an adverse analytical finding (positive doping test) to FINA (The International Swimming Federation).

Upon review, the lab reported that it had cross-contaminated its control urine with a anabolic steroid from another athlete's sample.

LNDD asks that that FINA destroy the previous report.

This is an egregious error. The lab admits it falsely accused an athlete.

Note that this problem is reported for an analysis that occurred July 4, 2006 – during the Tour de France.

I read this as a failure of “the Laboratory to ensure the full reliability and accuracy of drug tests and the accurate reporting of results” and grounds for the revocation of the laboratory’s accreditation.
